Performance Appraisal

Periodic performance reviews should be conducted for each staff member. The performance appraisal is a very useful tool for the supervisor and staff member to review an employee's performance and summarize goals. We recommend that you conduct at least an annual review, however, supervisors should be encouraged to conduct reviews whenever an employee's positive or negative performance warrants formal documentation. Many state licensing agencies require at least one written performance appraisal annually. You should consult your state regulations to insure compliance.

Provisional employees should receive a performance appraisal at least once before the end of the provisional period. We would recommend that the provisional employee be appraised twice, about midway through the provisional period and again just before the end. It is often difficult to rate the provisional employee in the same manner as other employees, therefore, we have developed a performance appraisal form to use for provisional employees.

The performance appraisal policy will formulate the time frames for appraisal, and your manuals appendix should include a copy of the form which your agency will utilize when conducting the review. The performance appraisal should be based upon the job description. The format for the performance appraisal for all employees should be basically the same. We have attached a sample performance appraisal form to this chapter to give you some suggestions.

Performance review is often a difficult task for supervisors. Supervisors are sometimes overwhelmed with doing appraisals for all of their staff at the same time. Staggering the time for appraisal will help eliminate this problem. Supervisors should be encouraged to consider the benefits of discussing an employee's progress and charting a course for the future more often. Performance reviews should occur regularly and supervisors should review the goals established at the annual performance appraisal and discuss the progress made towards the goals.

We suggest that each supervisor be required to obtain her/his supervisor's signature on the performance appraisal before it is discussed with the employee. This hierarchical approach will assure the immediate supervisor's superior that the review accurately reflects an employee's performance and presents a unified position to the employee. It will also give a reluctant evaluating supervisor the opportunity to discuss the appraisal before meeting with the employee. In addition, it will ensure accuracy. Many supervisors find it easier to simply praise employees during the appraisal process. This may compromise an employer's position when an employee is fired for poor performance yet their personnel record is full of appraisals containing praise. Be sure that performance appraisals accurately reflect the job as performed by the employee. Otherwise this valuable tool may be used against you in a wrongful termination suit.

Encourage supervisors to use the performance review to communicate with employees. It presents an opportunity to find out what goals employees want to establish for themselves and what the supervisor can do to assist them in attaining those goals.

Many agencies use a self-appraisal as part of the performance appraisal process. There are opposing opinions on this process. In the spirit of compromise we have developed an Employee Survey which you might consider in lieu of the self-appraisal. The survey will help promote discussion between the employee and supervisor during the appraisal meeting, yet it is not the routine self-appraisal which often places the supervisor in the position of defending the appraisal they are presenting to the employee.

Performance Appraisals will be based strictly upon job performance. Job descriptions will be utilized as the basis for the appraisal. All employees will be given an opportunity at orientation to discuss their job descriptions to assure that employees understand their responsibilities and tasks. All employees will be given a copy of the Performance Appraisal form at this time.

Performance Appraisals will be used as a foundation to establish goals for employees. Employees will be encouraged to develop short-term and long-term goals for themselves and to discuss their goals with their supervisor. Supervisors will monitor the employee's progress toward attaining the goals by scheduling performance review meetings with the employee from time to time.

Supervisors will also present to employees the goals of the team and their role in the successful attainment of these goals. Supervisors will keep employees informed of the team's progress and any changes in the team goals.

Supervisors should also solicit input from other employees who work closely with the employee being appraised.

Employees will be asked to complete a Survey prior to the Performance Appraisal meeting which will include information about the job, working conditions, and goals. The Survey will be discussed during the Performance Appraisal meeting.

Performance Appraisals will be conducted for Provisional Employees at least once during their Provisional Period using the Agency's Provisional Employee Appraisal Form.

Following the Provisional Period, Performance Appraisals will be conducted at least annually for each employee at [TIME FOR APPRAISAL].

Before the Performance Appraisal is presented to the employee, it will be reviewed and approved by the evaluating supervisor's superior.

Employees must to sign the Performance Appraisal Form. The form will have 3 options for signature:

- I have read, reviewed, and agree with the Appraisal; or
- I have read, reviewed, and disagree with the Appraisal (this option requires the employee to attach written comments); or
- I have read and reviewed the Appraisal and neither agree nor disagree.

When an employee refuses to sign the Performance Appraisal, another employee will be asked to witness the refusal.

Performance Appraisals will be forwarded to [EXECUTIVE DIRECTOR/DIRECTOR/HUMAN RESOURCE MANAGER] for review.

All employees will receive a copy of their Performance Appraisal. Performance Appraisals will be placed in the employee's personnel record.
